

Hodgson Sayers and Covid-19

At Hodgson Sayers we are committed to following the guidelines issued by the government during the current pandemic, in order to protect our people, our stakeholders and the wider communities in which we work, performing essential works and maintenance to properties.

We would like to take this opportunity to assure all of our supply chain, employees and clients that we will continue to operate as usual. We remain committed to those communities and clients with whom we work, and to continuing our site operations. We have, and are continuing to issue training, facilities and guidelines to our employees both at head office and on site, safeguarding them and those with whom they have contact.

The senior management team is constantly reviewing the situation and will implement any changes necessary to mitigate any potential negative effects as they become known.

Should there be any impact to individual projects or workstreams we will communicate with the relevant contact to discuss and implement any changes needed to address specific concerns and effect.

Where possible we are restricting non-essential site visits, and meetings will be conducted using video and teleconferencing facilities. Should you need to contact our staff, please call the relevant team member and we will arrange for these to be made available.

We appreciate that all of our supply chain, employees and clients are in a state of heightened awareness of the risks contained within the current pandemic, and we are sure that by working collaboratively, and by being aware of the risks and addressing these as they arise in a calm, safe and controlled way we will continue to deliver the levels of service needed both during and after this situation has passed.

Thank you for your patience and understanding.
